BOLIVIA-CHILE: The main focus of anti-government activity by the Bolivian left may soon shift back to La Paz from Santiago. Members of the Anti-Imperialist Revolutionary Front in Bolivia apparently are challenging Chilean-based exiles for leadership of the movement. They reportedly are now coordinating the activities of the front's several components and mean to ensure that the struggle will be directed from within Bolivia. The front, however, lacks both a unified command structure and clear lines of authority between its components at home and abroad.

Chile's orthodox Communists may be tiring of supporting the exiles, and their failure to progress beyond verbal attacks on the Banzer regime could be a sore point with the extreme left. Moreover, many of the estimated 200-400 exiles are said to have concluded that they can accomplish little in Chile and are planning to try to return home.
